

Unconditional Love

by Mr. Wayne

First, I would like to inform you that I'm a person on the Autistic Spectrum and to please forgive me for not being articulate and polite.

I'm a "slow" learner, but one very important thing I've learned from humans is that clarification is important. But I digress.

On the topic of Unconditional Love, I've never known it, but I know how to give it.
Please test me. I insist.

Love is too powerful for weak minds to practice every day.
Unconditional love is too powerful for some of the strongest minds to practice every day.
I know I can practice Unconditional love because I know myself better now.
When I unconditionally love someone, I don't know a better way to show it, for to do what it's supposed to be. I'm "slow".

Using the source of wisdom as The Holy Bible, John 3:16: God loved the world so much that He gave His unique Son so people can have eternal life.

1 John 4:8: Anyone who does not love does not know God, because God is love.

And Romans 8:38-39: Nothing in all creation can separate us from the love of God in Christ Jesus.

Using Human sources of wisdom, on Google, Unconditional Love... means caring for and accepting someone completely without any rules, limits, or expectations of getting anything back.
It is a deep, stable bond where your regard for the other person does not change, even if they make mistakes or face hard times.

So, if you're intelligent, you should know what is, and what's NOT Unconditional Love.

I have unconditionally loved my children.

I have never been unconditionally loved by any human being alive on Earth.

I know my great grandmother, Josephine Gibson loved me. She's dead.

The say the Jesus the Christ unconditionally loves me, he's alive in me.

So, I practice how to know what unconditional love feels like by at least one thing.

And as a human, I've learned that if you get unconditional love from one thing, that should be good enough.
